

BriggsAmasco Paves The Way With Specialist Training

Having allocated over 500 days to training its workforce in the past year, the country's leading waterproofing and roofing specialist BriggsAmasco is launching a major campaign to raise the standards of the construction trades with a unique apprenticeship scheme and a dedicated training facility available for any course providers in the construction industry.

Joining forces with the Liquid Roofing and Waterproofing Association (LRWA), BriggsAmasco's apprentice scheme will train, educate and develop the UK's next generation of liquid applied roofing contractors.

The two-year Specialist Apprenticeship Programme (SAP) combines classroom and workshop sessions with on-site instruction to help candidates obtain an NVQ Level 2 qualification – which in turn will enable them to get a CSCS card.

Training and development has always been a crucial part of our company ethos. Our dedicated training centre in Cradley Heath, Birmingham offers up to date classroom facilities and training rigs for hands on learning, and provides a fantastic base for the new LRWA apprenticeship scheme.

The company's training and meeting room facilities are available to any company or training provider wanting to improve the skills of its workforce. Whether you need to improve your company's green credentials, or keep your employees up to date with health and safety, having a trained workforce is integral to the future of your roofing business - transferring relevant skills to your employees enriches the whole company, increasing productivity and reducing costs.

A trained workforce can reduce overall costs as it can minimise snagging and reduce the number of man hours needed to complete tasks, which can also have the secondary effect of giving your company a crucial advantage over its competitors.

Having received the 'Exceptional Contribution to Training' award at the 2012 Roofing Awards, BriggsAmasco's new dedicated training facility and industry leading apprenticeship scheme is further proof of its unrivalled commitment to training and development.
